

Both sides are too badly wounded to renew the fight and the Confederates are retreating. The Confederates are retreating to our former lines. The Confederates are confident and in the spirit.

Chickasaw, April 10, 1862.

Immediately after the battle General Beauregard sent a flag of truce to General Grant concerning the burial of their dead. General Grant replied yesterday that, because of the terms of the armistice, the Confederates were not to be permitted to bury the dead of both parties, and that their work was already completed. He therefore informed the General that the Confederates had been ordered to take the bodies of their dead and to bury them as they saw fit. This note was respectfully addressed as follows:—

General Beauregard, commanding the Confederate Army.

At Monterey our courier found the federals busy putting their camps in order and looking after the dead and the wounded.

The Confederates killed are much less than was at first supposed and the wounded are comparatively slight. About thirty of them were well protected by the timber.

The Confederates killed are much less than was at first supposed and the wounded are comparatively slight. About thirty of them were well protected by the timber.

The federals had sent out strong reconnoitering parties to ascertain the result of the battle. The Confederates and many of them either killed or wounded.

The Confederates are holding firmly their old lines, and you are in good condition and ready for another fight.

Our wounded have all arrived; many of them have been sent to Memphis and Oxford.

[From the New York Day Book, April 10.]

Our latest report by mail from the great battle near Corinth are from the Memphis Appeal of the 8th, containing a partial list of the killed and wounded in the battle of April 4. The Appeal states that the federals estimated, on the very best official authority, at 12,000 to 15,000 in killed and wounded; 2,000 to 3,000 prisoners; about 100 pieces of artillery; and an immense quantity of stores. The same authority states that the Confederates lost in killed, wounded and missing at 8,000.

We append the following list of casualties among the federals, as far as it has been ascertained. It is merely such as the writer saw in passing over the field:—

Colonel John K. Williams, Lieutenant Colonel Tyler, Fourth Louisiana; Colonel Crowder, of Memphis; Colonel Booth, of Mississippi; Major Dohen, of Tennessee; Captain Johns, Sixth Tennessee.

Lieutenant Colonel Rich, Colonel Bates, Colonel Bowen, Major Lorry, Lieutenant Colonel Stewart, of Mississippi; Lieutenant Abbott, Adjutant Howell, Captain Williams, of Tennessee; Major Henry, Captain Tye, Major Henry, Captain Sutherland, Lieutenant Rice, Lieutenant Byrnes, the Adjutant of the Thirteenth Tennessee, Captain Wiley, of the same regiment, Captain Williams, of the same regiment, Tennessee recruits; Lieutenant Miller and Lieutenant Holmes.

Sandford's Mississippi battery was captured, and the enemy, except the guns.

ATLANTA, April 11, 1862.

A gentleman who left Corinth on Wednesday night, the 9th inst., reports that the fighting continued day long, but none seen. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were buried.

Our forces were compelled to destroy the ammunition captured for want of transportation to remove it to place of safety.

The federal army, it is stated, is disorganized, and there is no prospect of a renewal of the fight.—Despatch to Atlanta.

[From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.]

An intelligent member of the Fifth Texas regiment of the Army of the Potomac, who was here on Friday night, has just passed Corinth on Tuesday morning, and, stopping at hour, collected this information:—We have captured eight thousand prisoners, a large quantity of arms, and a large quantity of stores. The Confederates lost was about ten thousand. Among their killed were Generals Buntyn and Wallace. This is confirmed through another gentleman who left Corinth on Friday night, the 10th inst. General Poik's division drove five thousand of the federals into the river. About four thousand were lost, and many more taken.

The woods in the vicinity of the battle ground having been fired, many of the wounded on both sides were

The Richmond papers of Saturday claim that the Confederates to a six mile retreat. The Richmond papers also state that John C. Breckinridge distinguished himself on the battle field by his bravery.

General Prentiss and another officer of the federal army, who were taken prisoner, were sent to Richmond where they are being held. General Johnston, it is stated, was struck during the battle in the thigh with a Minnie ball, but continued to fight until he had lost a large loss of blood, fell from his horse and soon after expired.

The Confederates admit a loss of three thousand men, and the loss of about two hundred prisoners.

Both Richmond and Norfolk, it is stated, were illustrated on Friday night.

The Result of the Battle.

[From the Norfolk Day Book, April 16.]

At the present time, the result of the battle between the Confederate and Federal armies has been so signally vindicated that it is not a favorable time for the Confederate Government to propose a truce. The Federal Government has watered our soil with blood and tears, and darkened from the Confederate government, now bristling in readiness for the dire conflict which fanaticism and wrong have forced upon us.

Will you say to the government at Washington that we are countrymen and brothers; come, let us reason to reason; let us terminate this murderous controversy, a settle our difficulties without thirsting for each other's blood.

Is not the precious blood already spilled, poured from the hearts of brothers and countrymen, enough to red the hemoatems of fathers, husbands and sons already made sufficient to appease the vile demons loose among us?

Does not the weight of anguish which now oppresses every heart, sorrowing for their loved ones whose death sighs have been uttered on the field of war move the sympathy of the world? There is but one way in the way called "subjugation"; and people of war, conscious blood, will fall of the vile object to enslave us.

If the North has such tenderness of conscience as to be able to bear a separation in that called "secession," so that the institution there is no longer an honorable separation, like civilized beings—like Christian people. An absolute separation has already taken place, and every year of dividedness is a breach. We will place no value on their consent, and we will not be deceived. We will engage to attend to our own affairs and leave the North alone in her moral glory.

Where is the name of virtue and honor, on the part of the North? Where is the name of honor on the part of the South? Where is the name of honor in the present strife, who will not rejoice at its termination? Heaven and virtuous earth mustrown on the fraternal conflict now going on in our land, and must smile with satisfaction at the prospect of the approaching day of freedom from the shackles of the phrenetic dynasty soon to be overthrown.

Western Sanitary Commission.

Jas. A. Roseveit, No. 94 Maiden lane, acknowledged receipt of the following sums in aid of the Western Sanitary Commission, for the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers:-

Dollar subscriptions.....	$307
Cash.....	1
T. cash.....	2
Second-hand goods, Dutch church, Kingston, Jan. 2.....	2
A. Collier.....	48
M. Herzog, 120 pairs flannel drawers.....	70
Trinity church, Newark.....	70
First German Methodist Episcopal church, Twenty-third street-L. Argelyne.....	30

Schools	25
Am. Boorman	25
C. ...	25
C. ...	25
Cash	100
C. ...	100
C. Valentine	100
The ...	100
Frithingham	100
St. Ann's church for deaf mutes—Thos. Gal-	100
laudet	100
Reuben	100
Ladies of West Springfield, large box hospital	100
stores	100
Cash, J. S.	100
Cash	100
Cash	100
Cash	100
Cash	100
Joanna Temple Knannel	100
Twelfth street—D. Adler	100
Ladies of St. Paul's church, Bergen—H. Put-	100

Previously acknowledged.....	$490 30
Total.....	$5,909 80

At the service held on the first day of Panover, the 15th instant, at the Jewell temple Emanuel, in East Twelfth street, an address having been delivered by the Rev. Dr. S. Adler, on behalf of the sore wounded soldiers of this war, the sum of $451.69 was collected from the congregation, of which amount $225.00 was handed to Jas. L. Rembert, Esq., of the office of the Western department, to be held subject to further exigencies in other departments.